comments from our readers

CDS Foundation is growing quickly

As the chair of the Communications Committee of the Chicago Dental Society Foundation, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the staff writers of the CDS Review for so wonderfully covering the news of our Foundation.

As a fairly new charitable entity, our Foundation is ever so quickly growing and widening our scope in the areas of access to care and dental education; it is with the CDS Review's comprehensive coverage of our goals, fundraising events, grants and donations, and our new affiliation with a working clinic that our members have learned what the Chicago Dental Society Foundation is all about and why supporting this worthy cause is so important.

PRESIDENT'S PERSPECTIVE

by John Gerding, DDS

Write to Dr. Gerding at jgerdingdds@msn.com.

'It may be a hole to you, but it's a socket to me'

Back in my dental school days, in fact way back in my dental school days, it was customary at the end of the year for the senior class at the Loyola University School of Dentistry to put on a play lampooning the faculty and the school. This was enthusiastically embraced by all of the students, for it allowed some sort of "payback" for what we often deemed as harassment during our four years of study.

It happened that this was also the time of the very popular television comedy show Rowan & Martin's Laugh-In, with hosts Dan Rowan and Dick Martin and a cast of regulars that included Arte Johnson, Goldie Hawn, Ruth Buzzi and Jo Anne Worley. Following the lead of the show, one senior donned a very Einstein-like wig and attire to portray the eminent bygone oral anatomy professor from Loyola, Dr. Harry Sicher. Harry's line to his student, "It may be a hole to you, but it's a socket to me," brought the inevitable sucker punch to the chin of the "actor" and put him on the floor, just like every week on Laugh-In when a cast member would utter the fateful words "sock it to me."

So what's the point?

The point is that professionalism in dentistry may be hitting the floor, too. Back when Laugh-In was ruling the airwaves, the profession of dentistry was also riding high, at least in the area of respect among professions and occupations. We were then ranked first or second, whereas now we find ourselves considerably lower in trust and esteem in the eyes of the public.

What happened?

Professionalism is defined in the dictionary as the qualities or typical features of a profession, especially competence, skill and trust. The word embodies the characteristics inherent in a true professional that might lead to what one often thinks of as "professional conduct." When hearing the term "professional," we think of such terms as experienced, qualified, licensed, official, expert, masterful, polished, thorough, authoritative and businesslike. It would seem that we qualify as professionals from that list, but why then are we losing the respect of public opinion? It is certainly not our educational training, which has actually become lengthier over the past decades. Could it be our honesty? It is probably not a coincidence that there is suddenly a renewed interest in ethics as part of the dental curriculum.

There are undoubtedly numerous factors contributing to our decline in ranking, not the least of which is the explosion of advertising in the dental field. At one time we were almost prohibited by our dental ethics from anything more than the listing of name and phone number in the telephone directories, and we had actual height and size limitations for the signs above our office doors. Now it would seem that anything goes. No wonder the public has doubts after encountering full-page color ads or mailers claiming superiority, radio promises of "teeth in a day," discount coupons and other come-ons to get a prospective patient in the door. We're beginning to come across like so many other businesses whose only concern is the bottom line, the profit.

Does it mean that we have to go back to the days of white coats and ties instead of the more practical and comfortable scrubs when we treat our patients? Give up the use of credit cards and financing options that are so necessary today? Stop the expanded use of auxiliaries and practicing under “General Supervision?” Hardly! What we must do is bring back the aura of care and professionalism that dominated our offices not that long ago.

It all starts with that first contact with our office: the initial telephone call. The receptionist, our representative to the new prospective patient, needs to be professional, yet with a caring voice and willingness to listen. The patient’s first visit to our office is equally important and must be impressive. We should be on time, have all of the professionally appearing paperwork ready, and be operating out of a clean, neat facility. Our attire, like our decorating, should likewise be updated and fresh. Stains on the carpet, old wallpaper, or a worn set of scrubs don’t exactly inspire confidence. We need to first address the patient’s primary reason for being there, and then worry about the possibility of a comprehensive treatment plan — not the other way around. We must give the patient treatment options for their problems, including the possibility of no treatment at all, and the costs therein. The visit should end with a businesslike handling of the financial aspects of the treatment that day, and an end-of-the-day follow-up call from the doctor. This, especially in the case of more involved or difficult treatment, is always welcomed by the patient. It is these extra touches that go a long way toward showing that caring attitude that often leads to a second appointment and the referral to friends and relatives, the best kind of internal marketing.

We must avoid going down the path of our medical colleagues, a path that the insurance industry is trying so hard to force us down. With new graduates so heavily in debt from their schooling, it is very tempting for them to join one of the many dental insurance HMO or PPO plans or become a part of the rapidly growing corporately run dental groups. With every new dentist that chooses one of those options, however, comes further erosion of our self-preservation efforts, self-efficacy and our ability to improve or even maintain our professional stature with the public we serve. ■

Are you prepared for retirement

by Joanna Brown

When the alarm goes off on another Monday morning, it's natural to think to yourself, "How soon can I retire?"

Though the question maybe asked in jest, experts agree that dentists should be thinking about retirement long before your first gray hair appears. The loss of a regular paycheck and the wealth of unscheduled free time are but two reasons that many professionals find retirement as stressful as their working days.

"People find a lot of meaning in their work," said Ed de St. Aubin, an associate professor of psychology at Marquette University. He explained that, for many highly educated and experienced professionals, job satisfaction extends beyond money and benefits.

"When you get to the level of a dentist, it's part of who you are. And many people when they retire will ask 'if I'm not a dentist, then who am I? I still want to find meaning in what I do and in caring for people.'"

'I think one of the scariest things about retirement is the feeling of being 'worthless,' and that goes for your finances, as well.'

WORK TOWARD LEISURE

Building your whole sense of being on your career, Mr. de St. Aubin explained, will set you up for depression. Leaving your job will bring an inevitable change in the social network you've developed with patients and co-workers, as well as a lot of free time to fill in most any way you wish.

Avoid depression by building a life outside of your office while you are still working; Mr. de St. Aubin recommends that you start in your 40s. Grow and strengthen your social circle, and explore hobbies that you can pursue long after your working days are over.

"The more of those things that you have outside of the home and your career, the less likely you are to fall into depression," Mr. de St. Aubin said.

Consider also how you will transition to retirement. Gone are the days of our manufacturing-based economy, when you clocked out at 5 p.m. Friday, collected your gold watch, and woke up Monday morning with nothing to do.

"This is not your grandfather's retirement," Mr. de St. Aubin said of our current service-based economy. "There's

Know what to look for when choosing a financial advisor

Picking a financial advisor to help plan for your retirement is not something to be considered lightly, nor should it be intimidating, accountant Elaine Pesavento advised. Here are a few keywords to look for when interviewing candidates.

AGENT: This person is a contractor of the insurance company whose job is to sell the insurance company's products. They work for the insurer.

BROKER: This person has permission from their client to seek quotes from various insurance companies on the client's behalf. They work for the insured.

CERTIFIED FINANCIAL PLANNER (CFP): This is a professional certification for financial planners conferred by the Certified Financial Planner Board of Standards. To use the designation, professionals must meet education, examination, experience and ethics requirements, and pay an ongoing certification fee. "Good ones help you look at your priorities and do their best to allocate your assets in ways that will fund your priorities, based on your timeline," Ms. Pesavento said.

REGISTERED INVESTMENT ADVISOR (RIA): This person is registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission or a state's securities agency. Individuals or firms that receive compensation for advice on investing in securities such as stocks, bonds, mutual funds or exchange-traded funds are deemed to be investment advisers. "It has been my experience that RIAs are held to a higher standard of due diligence than a typical CFP," Ms. Pesavento said. "When they recommend insurance products, they are acting as more of a broker than an agent."

been a big shift in how people move to their non-working life."

In fact, the transition is far less absolute, Mr. de St. Aubin explained. "People gradually cut their hours, bring in a partner, or maybe take on a mentorship role in their field." You might also spend time volunteering in a clinic.

PREPARE AT HOME

Another area of concern is the change that retirement brings in your relationship with your spouse. In many cases, the dentist has spent many years working full-time outside the home, making good money and enjoying the respect of the staff and patients, while the spouse has been less involved with the workforce and more involved with household management responsibilities.

"There might be tension in the power dynamics in your relationship when you

'There might be tension in the power dynamics in your relationship when you start to think about spending more time in the house with your spouse — in their domain, frankly.'

start to think about spending more time in the house with your spouse — in their domain, frankly," Mr. de St. Aubin said.

"Now, you're home all day together and suddenly you've got a better way to organize the pantry. Retirement should be liberating and freeing, certainly, but you've got to be mindful of the potential for tension in that relationship."

PLAN AHEAD

And then there are your finances. The loss of a regular paycheck is something you should plan for as soon as you accept your first job, advised Elaine Pesavento, a Certified Public Accountant, Certified Fraud Examiner and Master of Science in Taxation. She is a partner in the firm of Pesavento and Pesavento, Ltd., and a frequent Midwinter Meeting lecturer.

"I think one of the scariest things about retirement is the feeling of being 'worthless,' and that goes for your finances, as well," she said. "But for those who prepare for it during their work life, it's less of a factor. Your money, if it's handled properly, grows for you."

And thus she made her first recommendation: start saving early.

Saving $5,000 a year from the beginning of your career makes a huge difference at the end of your work life. That's $96 per week that Ms. Pesavento recommended be pulled directly out of your bank account and deposited in an IRA or other tax-deferred retirement plan.

Assuming the money maintains a conservative 6 percent average growth rate (though the average since 1929 has been much greater), your $96 weekly set-aside will total $150,000, and will have grown to more than $400,000 by the time you retire.

But if you wait 10 years to start saving, Ms. Pesavento warned, you'll have to set aside an extra $65,000 to reach that same retirement goal. That's $10,750 annually, rather than the far more manageable $5,000 contribution to your IRA.

LIVE SIMPLY

Ms. Pesavento's second recommendation is just as simple: don't spend all that you earn. She recommends setting as much as you can aside in a deferred retirement plan, like an IRA, so that your wealth can accumulate faster.

Talk to your financial planner more about this soon, because American taxpayers can anticipate a large increase in the income tax rate in 2013, Ms. Pesavento said. Inactivity by Congress will return the tax rate to levels last seen in 2001.

While there is a variety of Internet-based programs, Apps and other software available to help organize a budget, Ms. Pesavento said a good financial advisor is irreplaceable. Tax laws and state laws change so quickly that no online resource or software can keep up, she explained, whereas a living, breathing financial planner can help you organize your retirement goals based on your personal timeline.

"Find a good financial planner — not just someone who is going to sell you a good insurance product, but someone who will talk to you about how to fund your priorities. Start early and be consistent — diligent — in saving."

But even an accounting professional knows saving every single year isn't realistic. Ms. Pesavento said the years that her three children were all in college were lean. But she got back to saving as soon as possible, and today feels good about her progress toward attaining her retirement goals.

"You just do the best you can." ■

5 predictors of a healthy retirement

Following are five predictors of a healthy retirement. Professor Ed de St. Aubin said that the popular research shows that the more of these you have, the better your transition away from the office will be.

MONEY: Have you made smart investments to support yourself after your paychecks stop coming?

HEALTH: Able bodies and minds and healthy levels of activity make retirement a more pleasant experience.

VOLUNTARY RETIREMENT: People who choose to retire and initiate it themselves fare better than those who are forced to, such as pilots who have a mandatory retirement age.

SOCIAL CIRCLE: Your social network will inevitably shrink when you leave the office staff and patients that have for years filled your day with social interaction and stimulation. The depth of your five closest relationships — including that with your partner or spouse — will bring you laughter, activity and help in times of need after you retire.

ATTITUDE: The way you view your retirement will drastically affect your experience. Are you mourning your loss of authority, or gaining an opportunity to spend more time with your children and grandchildren? Anxiety about how you will spend your new-found free time will negatively impact your experience.

MOM

BRINGS CARE, DIGNITY TO THOSE MOST IN NEED

by Joanna Brown

For friends Sherrie and Cheri, it was just another weekend adventure.

Cheri, of Grayslake, heard about the Mission of Mercy from the hygienist she sees at a Lake County dental clinic. Determined to get the fillings she needed — but couldn't afford — she made plans to be one of the first in line at the Lake County Fairgrounds June 8.

Cheri called Sherrie and asked her to come along. Sherrie rode the train from her Chicago home to Grayslake June 7, spent the night at Cheri's home, and got in line with Cheri and Cheri's husband not long after the sun came up.

Sherrie had two extractions and received a partial denture at the Mission of Mercy dental clinic; she was also seen by a physician and an eye doctor on site. Cheri got two fillings, as well.

"We got excellent care, and were treated with respect and dignity. My hygienist who told me about this — when I saw her here today I gave her a big hug," Cheri said.

Sherrie and Cheri were but two of the 1,288 dental encounters recorded at the 2012 Mission of Mercy, cohosted by the Illinois State Dental Society Foundation and the CURE Network June 8-9. Just like the 2010 Illinois Mission of Mercy, this year's event brought volunteer dentists, hygienists and assistants together to deliver free dental care to patients who would not otherwise have access to necessary treatment.

But new in 2012 was the partnership with the CURE Network, which added physicians, nurses and optometrists to the clinical environment. Basic medical screenings, including blood pressure readings, cholesterol checks, breast exams and PAP smears, as well as eye exams were offered on site. Eyeglasses were ground in a mobile lab also on the premises.

"There is so much need in our state, and nowhere for patients to go. This is but a Band-Aid on the system, but we're bringing it to the people who need it, and I love being a part of that," said Mark Humenik, a Northbrook dentist who co-chaired the event with dentist Brad Barnes, of Normal.

The Illinois State Dental Society Foundation partnered with the CURE Network to bring together volunteer dentists, hygienists and assistants — as well as physicians, nurses, optometrists and laypeople — to deliver free healthcare to patients who would not otherwise have access to necessary treatment.

The Illinois State Dental Society reported 363 medical encounters and 432 vision encounters at the 2012 Mission of Mercy.

Volunteers came from throughout Illinois to help patients in most every way, from numbing mouths and extracting teeth to sterilizing instruments and escorting patients between clinical areas. The dental professionals maintained high energy levels throughout the weekend.

“We’re all out here because giving is contagious. We all do it in our offices all the time, but when we get together to do it, there’s a spontaneous, combustible explosion, and it’s awesome,” said David Fulton Jr., CDS president-elect who was working in the anesthesia area at the Mission of Mercy.

“Part of being a dentist is service. Sometimes the goal isn’t monetary, but just to help your fellow man,” echoed CDS Secretary Richard Holba in between escorting patients. “With the current state of jobs and insurance and Medicaid, this is the only care some patients can get. And this year, having the whole medical team here with us in one place, we can get so much more done to try and be preventive.”

Dr. Humenik described the patients he met — including those who lined up the night before and camped outside the Fairgrounds for a place in line.

“I talked to a patient this morning who had extractions and fillings and got a partial for her four front teeth, and she was thrilled. She said her birthday is coming up in August, and she’s really going to celebrate it.”

Another patient, Ellen, of Wauconda, was celebrating her 63rd birthday at the Mission of Mercy. She came for a partial denture.

“My friend told me about this opportunity. I can go to the County, but they don’t do partials and everything costs money. I have $18 in my checking account,” Ellen said. “I don’t know what all they’re offering here, but I’m here to go with the flow.

“I’m so grateful. This is a blessing.”

Explained Jay Landers, Executive Director of the Illinois State Dental Society Foundation: “Patients have some really poignant stories, and as soon as you hear them you know why you’re here. We’re all giving and sacrificing something to be here, but it felt really good to open the doors this morning. This can be life-saving and changing for the patients on the receiving end.”

Dentist David Miller, who currently serves as Chief of the Division of Oral Health at the Illinois Department of Public Health, said the Mission of Mercy also makes a powerful statement to the Legislature at a time when dental benefits are being cut back.

“I think the message to legislators is that our profession cares about giving back. We’ve got the entire dental family working here together, as well as a public/private partnership teaming up with the professional organizations. It’s a tremendous model for other entities in our state to follow.

“I think when you look at the whole event lawmakers will see that oral health is part of overall health, and that’s why these groups are coming together here. There are a lot of adults who need help and are getting it here; what will they do next?” ■

Special Smiles

Volunteers find treating Special Olympic athletes to be a rewarding experience

by Joanna Brown

The 2012 Special Smiles clinic may have looked like a family picnic, what with the folding tables and chairs, colorful signs, and high-energy volunteers who filled the park with laughter, but there was serious business going on there. Nearly 600 of the athletes who came to Eckersall Stadium May 9 to compete in the Special Olympics received free dental screenings, oral hygiene instruction and a goodie bags filled with home care items and referrals for continued dental care.

Dentist and event organizer Fred Margolis, who marked 18 years with Special Smiles this year, said the event serves two very important purposes. His co-chair is dentist Ricardo Mendoza.

“One (purpose) is to help the athletes feel more comfortable with dentists and dentistry; that’s why we do it in this beautiful park-like setting,” Dr. Margolis said. “And the second is to help the volunteers to be more comfortable with special needs patients.”

Dentist John Brescia, a long-time Special Smiles volunteer, was one of the dentists who wore a smile all morning long — even as the sun passed behind the clouds that threatened their clinic. This proud member of the Loyola University School of Dentistry Class of 1979 who currently practices in River Forest looks forward to the annual event.

“It sounds selfish, but I find it fulfilling,” he said. “It’s a good chance to help patients of all ages who have special needs.”

Though he doesn’t see a lot of patients with special needs in his regular practice, Dr. Brescia doesn’t shy away from the opportunity. Treating them is different, he said, and requires more patience, but it’s a good challenge.

“You have to be a good listener, but we should be with all patients. You have to be open-minded and try your best, but you do with all your patients. You have to be resourceful. If a deaf patient comes into the office, you might question ‘how can I treat this patient,’ but you find ways. Of course you can treat them.” ■

Listen to this success story

One of the easiest paths to a successful dental practice is also one of the hardest: listening to your patient.

Really, it's all any of us wants, anywhere we go and in most everything we do: to be heard and understood.

Patients who feel their dentist and staff really listen to them are happier, loyal, and more trusting and agreeable to treatment and instructions.

Dentist William van Dyk of San Pablo, CA, focuses on the importance of listening skills in his presentations on successful patient-centered practices. Get to a patient's eye level or sit facing them while talking, he advised.

"Too often, the dentist is sitting and talking to the back of the patient's head or standing over them," he said. "It doesn't take any extra time to sit down and face them."

Other advice from Dr. van Dyk:

- Have direct eye contact with the patient. "People trust you more if you look them in the eye."
- Repeat back to the patient what they have said. That dialogue helps zero in on the real problem and clarifies questions that can lead to a more accurate diagnosis, he said.
- Listen for the patient's chief concern during the conversation.

So often what gets in the way, Dr. van Dyk said, is a "doctor's tendency to come to diagnosis or solution as soon as possible." After all, he said, "we're supposed to have the answers."

The trouble is that this kind of "find it-fix it" approach — efficient as it is — doesn't build a satisfying emotional connection. Let's remember, patients are people.

Who made you the boss?

Q: What's been your training ground for learning to be a boss?

- a. Business school
- b. The workplace
- c. Dental school

For most of us, learning to lead in the workplace is something of an on-the-job experience. The path isn't always easy, but with realistic expectations of yourself and others, it's navigable.

What is clear is that being a great boss is absolutely vital to the success of your practice. First thing, exhale. "It's a journey," assured Harvard Business School professor Linda Hill in a Washington Post interview last fall.

Ms. Hill makes several important points about the transformation made on the way to becoming a good leader. It shouldn't surprise that the hard work starts within.

- A boss has to "unlearn the individual contributor mindset" and focus on a new role as someone responsible for the performance and satisfaction of others.

- A boss needs to see him- or herself as a builder, someone who is flexible, creative, supportive and encouraging. "It's not about setting direction for people to follow. It's about building communities that encourage bottom-up initiative," Ms. Hill said. ■

What should you do when IDFPR contacts you?

Part One of a two-part series

Only receiving a letter from the Illinois Department of Financial and Professional Regulation (IDFPR) ranks as high on a dentist's fear meter as being served with a malpractice lawsuit.

IDFPR investigates and prosecutes instances of professional misconduct as set forth in the Illinois Dental Practice Act. Examples of professional misconduct that may prompt an IDFPR inquiry include:

- Writing prescriptions beyond the scope of dentistry;
- Being convicted of a crime;
- Patient abandonment;
- Performing unnecessary work;
- Permitting an unlicensed person to perform activities that require a dental license;
- Engaging in acts of gross negligence; and
- Improper billing.

WHY AM I BEING INVESTIGATED

IDFPR typically launches an investigation based on a complaint made by a patient. For instance, a patient who develops problems following a placement of a crown on Tooth 19 seeks a second opinion from another dentist who finds an open margin and a violation of the biologic width. The patient then complains to IDFPR.

In addition to patient complaints, the IDFPR may look into a dentist's treatment based on its review of a settlement or adverse jury verdict reported to the National Practitioner Data Bank (www.npdb-hipdb.hrsa.gov). An example would be a six-figure settlement for failure to diagnose periodontal disease.

Dentists or dental specialists whom IDFPR has determined have committed any of the above acts or omissions may face sanctions against their dental licenses that include reprimand, probation, suspension, monetary fines and compulsory continuing education. If the misconduct is severe enough, the Illinois State Dental Board may even revoke a dentist's license.

While most of the complaints against a dental professional come from patients, complaints can also be filed by insurance companies, other dental professionals, dental staff, law enforcement agencies and dental boards of other states. IDFPR is charged with investigating every complaint as part of its "duty to protect the public."

© Shutterstock Images

DON'T PANIC

If you receive a notice from IDFPR, take a deep breath and don't panic. Many complaints are dismissed with no action taken against the dentist. Nevertheless, the dentist should check with his or her malpractice insurance carrier, as most provide attorney representation for dental board matters. (Insurance policies do not pay any fines that might be imposed by the dental board.) Regardless of whether the insurance carrier will pay for it, you must retain an attorney when dealing with IDFPR — no matter how meritless the claim may seem.

Secondly, make sure the attorney has experience dealing with IDFPR, as this is no time for an inexperienced lawyer to "learn on the job." There is a lot at stake. Also, resist the temptation to contact IDFPR to tell your side of the story, as in the heat of the moment one might mishandle the matter in its early stages.

WHAT ACTIONS SHOULD YOU AVOID?

Here are some rules of thumb for dealing with the complaint from the beginning:

- DON'T contact the patient, as it is IDFPR — not the patient — that determines whether the case will go forward.
- DON'T alter your records.
- DON'T write a letter to IDFPR with your version of the issue.
- DON'T talk to an IDFPR investigator without your attorney present.

If an IDFPR investigator shows up at your office unannounced and is looking to obtain a patient's record or speak with you, respectfully decline. Instead, tell the investigator you will provide a copy of the patient's record and speak to the investigator about the allegations after you have spoken to an attorney.

After obtaining a copy of the patient's records, the complaint is usually reviewed by the IDFPR dental coordinator (who is a dentist) to determine if the issue can be resolved without a conference. For instance, if a patient is simply requesting a copy of his or her records because they are moving out of state, the matter may be resolved by merely having the dentist turn over a copy of the records.

However, a majority of the complaints require an Investigative Conference with an IDFPR investigator and the IDFPR dental coordinator. We'll discuss that and the steps that follow in this space in the next issue of the CDS Review. ■

FROM THE GROUND UP A column about the CDS Foundation.

Earn a greater return on investing in your community through volunteering

Although the Chicago Dental Society Foundation is celebrating its fifth birthday this year, we're still a very young organization.

As such, our job as board and committee members is not just to raise money but also to build our brand: to get the word out that the CDS Foundation is here to affect change and improve oral health in our communities. We are constantly looking for ways to further the reach and visibility of both CDS and the CDS Foundation.

That's why the Give a Kid a Toothbrush campaign we launched this spring is so important to us. Funds raised put dentists and hygiene products in local classrooms to teach local students how, when and why to use them, in ways that will benefit their oral health for years to come. CDS Foundation Board Secretary Mary Starsiak made two visits this spring, speaking with students at Sherwood Elementary School in February and STEM Magnet Academy in June.

Get personally involved. Be on a CDS Foundation committee or volunteer to visit an underserved school. You will earn an even greater return on your investment, and so will the community.

CDS Foundation Vice Chair Mary Hayes was one of a few volunteers who set up personal fundraising pages for this program at Fundly.com. Dr. Hayes was impressed by how her family and friends responded to her call to help local children. We are so thankful to those who supported these efforts in various ways this spring, and we look forward to the next school visit when classes resume this fall.

We also rely on our most active volunteers to talk about CDS Foundation activities while they are out and about. We've been to Branch meetings and golf outings to talk about our plans for the future, and to answer questions from our supporters. We hosted a cultivation event June 20, where dozens of guests joined us at Aqua to learn more about our mission and to share with us their ideas for improving access to dental care in our communities.

Terri Tiersky, who chairs our Major Gifts Committee, is one example of the work all our leaders are doing to promote the CDS Foundation's growth. Dr. Tiersky works with her colleagues to be sure that a CDS Foundation representative gives a report at each meeting of their shared North Side Branch and their political party. She also joined me at the Suburban Scramble May 16, where we talked with golfers as they played through one of the holes. (We raised some money, too!) Or, you might have seen Dr. Tiersky working as X-ray lead at the Mission of Mercy in June; Dr. Hayes, trustee Kevin King and I were also on site.

Our foundation leaders are also promoting access to oral healthcare in their communities. Dr. Tiersky works with Expanding Lives, an organization founded by one of her patients to bring young women from West Africa to the United States each summer for classes and cultural experiences. She worked with her 12-year-old daughter to host a fundraiser in her community, and she treated four West African visitors in her dental office last summer.

Dr. Tiersky's colleagues similarly exemplify strong philanthropic leadership. Trustee Mike Durbin co-chairs the Illinois Donated Orthodontic Services program, and is active on the American Association of Orthodontists's Council on Orthodontic Healthcare, which among other duties is responsible for monitoring orthodontic access issues. And Dr. King is a regular volunteer at the Pacific Garden Mission on the Near West Side.

The CDS Foundation is always looking for more volunteers. Your dollars go farther because volunteers like Drs. Durbin, Hayes, King, Starsiak and Tiersky are working to promote our Foundation's goals in the community.

Get personally involved. Be on a CDS Foundation committee or volunteer to visit an underserved school. You will earn an even greater return on your investment, and so will the community.

Help us help our community, and then let us know how you are giving back. ■

ACCESS TO CARE

A look at challenges facing our profession.

Special needs patients

A growing list of resources is available online to help you overcome challenges

by Joanna Brown

Special Smiles is an exceptional feature of Chicago's annual Special Olympics. Athletes of all ages and abilities, with permission from their families or guardians, receive oral exams, hygiene instruction, a goodie bag filled with home care items, and a list of places where they can seek treatment year-round. (For more information about the 2012 Special Smiles event, see page 14.)

For many of the athletes and others with special needs, finding a dental home is a challenge. Some need sedation during treatment. For others, their dentist will need additional training in patient and behavior management to work with the multiple medical conditions their patients exhibit and the medications they routinely take. Most of the time, however, the patients are limited by the insurance — often Medicaid — that will finance their care.

There are resources, but we have to get the information out.

"In dentistry, the biggest resource that we have is multiple offices that are accessible all over, but it's really difficult to translate (the care of patients with special needs) to all private practices unless you've been exposed to treating patients with special needs," explained Jason Grinter, the Director of Special Patient Care at Advocate Illinois Masonic Medical Center, Vice President of the Chicago-based Special Care Dentistry Association, and a member of the Special Smiles veteran Fred Margolis says there are a number of resources dentists can use to help them treat patients with a variety of special needs.

Chicago Dental Society's Access to Care Committee. "There are resources, but we have to get the information out."

Advocate Illinois Masonic Medical Center, Dr. Grinter gave as one example, dedicates every Thursday to caring for patients with special needs. With nine dental residents, one recent Thursday included two patients in the operating room, nine under IV sedation, and a slew of other patients with special needs who did not require anesthesia but did need extra time and care in the clinical setting.

This hospital program is among the biggest resources in the Chicago area for patients with special needs, Dr. Grinter said, but there are others. His career started at Rockford's Milestone Dental Clinic, which has a large capacity for patients with developmental disabilities. Patients come from as far as Springfield, Chicago, and the collar counties for dental care.

Dentist Fred Margolis has been working with the Special Smiles program for 18 years and said the General Practice Residency programs at the

Ask the right questions

Special Smiles veteran Fred Margolis recommends that any dentist who will be seeing a patient with special needs contact the parent or caregiver by telephone prior to the appointment. Ask the following questions:

- What is the patient's previous experience with a dentist? What did the patient like or not like? What went well or not as well?
- Who brushes the patient's teeth at home? Does the patient use an electric toothbrush?
- Does the patient have personal preferences and needs? For example, if the patient doesn't like loud noises, you may schedule the dental visit at a time when the office is otherwise empty.
- How does the patient respond to television? Should you shut off your patient education videos?
- Is the patient using medications that may complicate treatment?

Rush University Medical Center and the Loyola University Health System, as well as that at Advocate Illinois Masonic Medical Center, are good resources for patients with special needs. Patients and their caregivers can also call their local social services agencies for referrals to programs that are specific to their community.

The Chicago-based Special Care Dentistry Association (SCDA) maintains a dentist referral site, searchable by state. Executive Director Meghan Carey said this could be used by patients and their caretakers seeking dental care, and also by dentists who want to treat a patient with special needs and seek to consult with a dentist more experienced in the process. Search <https://scda.site-ym.com/?Referral> to find a dentist for consultation.

Ms. Carey said the next year will bring a lot of improvements to their educational offerings, as well. This includes downloadable fact sheets about the care of patients with special needs, a growing speakers bureau for continuing education in the care of patients with special needs, and webinars hosted by experts in this area of dentistry. These all augment SCDA's annual meeting, which will be in New Orleans in 2013. Find information at www.scdonline.org.

Currently available for download, the National Maternal and Child Oral Health Resource Center, based at Georgetown University and funded by the Maternal and Child Health Bureau, Health Resources and Services Administration, Department of Health and Human Services, offers several articles about caring for children with special needs. Find them online at <http://www.mchoralhealth.org/materials/CSHCN.html>.

If you're looking for information about treating older patients and their special needs, Dr. Grinter recommended Oral Health America's Wisdom Tooth Project. This effort to connect, educate, and advocate for the oral health of all older Americans has posted a lot of information at <http://oralhealthamerica.org/programs/wisdom-tooth-project/>. ■

Children's dental clinic opens in Lawndale

Lawndale Christian Health Center (LCHC) has opened a new Health and Fitness Center in Chicago's Lawndale neighborhood. Complementing the indoor track and fitness machines is a clinic offering comprehensive care for women and medical and dental care for children.

The Health and Fitness Center is located at 3750 W. Ogden Ave. Alongside the fitness opportunities at the 60,000-square-foot facility are a café with freshly prepared healthy food options and classroom space for group fitness classes.

"With the new Health and Fitness Center, LCHC has created a new standard for improving the health of an urban, low-income community," Bruce Miller, CEO of LCHC, said in a prepared release. "This model combines access to great clinical care with the key prevention tools of exercise, fitness and wellness in an environment where community residents can affordably engage themselves to solve chronic health issues like obesity and diabetes."

Chicago Mayor Rahm Emanuel participated in a ribbon cutting at the new facility, and praised the ways in which it will promote a higher quality of life for Chicagoans and increase the overall economic and social vitality of the community.

The $24 million center was partially funded through a New Markets Tax Credit Program, a federal program that encourages new development, job growth and retention, education and small business growth in the country's most economically depressed areas. U.S. Bank committed more than $6 million of New Markets Tax Credit equity to this project. The federal government granted an additional $10 million of federal stimulus funds to support construction.

The Health and Fitness Center is expected to achieve LEED gold certification for its environmentally friendly features, including its green roof and energy-efficient lighting. It will also create 100 new jobs, including those for healthcare providers, fitness staff and custodians.

Dr. Martin graduated from the Marquette University School of Dentistry in 2003 and completed a General Practice Residency at Advocate Illinois Masonic Medical Center in 2004. She worked with the hospital's Mobile Dental Program, providing low-cost dental care to underserved populations throughout Chicago, while also working in private practice.

In 2008, Dr. Martin opened her own practice at the Illinois Masonic Medical Center, as well as a private pediatric practice in Chicago's Logan Square neighborhood, serving mostly low-income children.

Also receiving a Golden Toothbrush Award was The Children's Clinic at the Oak Park Infant Welfare Society, a not-for-profit, community-supported pediatric health clinic for low-income children in west suburban Cook County and Chicago. It offers a wide variety of services and educational programs to 2,600 dental patients during more than 6,000 annual visits. The clinic has been lead by Oral Health Director Jill Baskin for the last 15 years.

The Golden Toothbrush Awards annually recognize innovation in the community oral health field. ■

CCARE Lynch Foundation cofounders Neil Perlman and Sharon Perlman.

Education. Advocacy. Research.

Sharon Perlman is on a mission to raise awareness about Lynch Syndrome

by Rachel Azark

Most people have never heard of Lynch Syndrome. In fact, only 5 percent of individuals who have the disease know they have it. It's this lack of knowledge that has Sharon Perlman on a mission.

In 2010, Dr. Perlman and her brother, Neil Perlman, cofounded the Colon Cancer Alliance for Research and Education for Lynch Syndrome (CCARE Lynch Syndrome).

Lynch Syndrome is a genetic disorder of a mismatched repair gene defect; people with Lynch Syndrome don't have an ability to repair cancer-causing cells in their bodies.

It's the most common genetic cause of colon and uterine cancers, and it's responsible for a number of other cancers, including ovarian, stomach, pancreatic, biioduct, brain and it was recently linked to breast cancer. People with Lynch Syndrome have a 50 percent chance of passing it on to their children.

Having lost three family members with the disease, the Perlmans felt that it was finally time to take action.

"I realized there was a real lack of knowledge and awareness about Lynch Syndrome," said Dr. Perlman. "We wanted to develop an organization to increase awareness so that we can save lives."

The foundation also aims to stimulate research. It even established a research award administered through the Society of Gynecologic Oncology.

"I like to say we're leading the fight against Lynch Syndrome through education, advocacy and research," said Dr. Perlman.

CCARE Lynch Syndrome is a national organization which has partnered with other organizations like Facing Our Risk of Cancer Empowered (FORCE), the Ovarian Cancer National Alliance, and the Foundation of Women's Cancers, and they contribute to a number of websites including Fran Drescher's Cancer Schmancer Movement (www.cancerschmancer.org).

In addition to these partnerships, CCARE Lynch Syndrome is getting the word out through its own website, social media and community programs. They hosted a Lynch Syndrome screening and health fair at North Shore Evanston Hospital and teamed up with the Robert H. Lurie Comprehensive Cancer Center at Northwestern Hospital to mark Colon Cancer Awareness Month in March.

Gov. Pat Quinn even declared March 22 Lynch Syndrome Awareness Day.

"When Gov. Quinn signs something, it's very exciting," said Dr. Perlman.

At the end of June, CCARE Lynch Syndrome hosted its second annual night of improv and stand-up comedy — because laughter is the best medicine.

"We want to bring laughter to the disease," said Dr. Perlman. "It's a fundraising event and a lot of fun."

Dentists can help in this effort by being aware of the disease and looking for the signs and symptoms that might be reported by patients; getting a complete health history of every patient is an important start. If the dentist identifies a pattern, check out the CCARE Lynch Syndrome website for more information (see below).

"Every time I communicate with an individual who suspects they have Lynch Syndrome, I have helped them and have provided motivation and hope, and that is a momentous occasion for me," said Dr. Perlman. ■

What patients should know about dental X-rays

Over the past few months dental X-rays have received a lot of media attention. However, the American Dental Association (ADA) takes a long-standing position that dentists should order dental X-rays for patients only when necessary for diagnosis and treatment. Below are answers to some common questions about dental X-rays.

HOW OFTEN SHOULD DENTAL X-RAYS BE TAKEN?

There are a few things to be considered when looking at how often X-rays should be taken. They are: your present oral health, your age, your risk for diseases, and any signs or symptoms of oral disease that you may be experiencing.

Some patients may require X-rays more often. For instance, children will require them because their teeth and jaws are still developing and are more likely to be affected with tooth decay. However, new patients should expect to have a dentist recommend X-rays so they can determine the present state of your teeth and to identify changes that may occur later.

Your dentist should always review your history, examine your mouth and then decide whether or not to take X-rays.

WHAT ARE THE BENEFITS?

According to the ADA, many diseases of the teeth and surrounding tissues can not be seen during a routine examination of your mouth. X-rays can help reveal:

- Small areas of decay between teeth or below existing fillings
- Infections in the bone
- Gum disease
- Abscesses or cysts
- Developmental abnormalities
- Some types of tumors

Catching problems early can help save time, money and unnecessary discomfort.

WHAT IF I AM PREGNANT?

Sometimes an X-ray may be needed for treatment that can not wait. Untreated dental infections while pregnant have the risk of affecting the fetus, and so dental treatment may be necessary.

Exposure to radiation is very low during a dental X-ray, but every precaution is taken to keep you and the baby safe. A leaded apron should be used to minimize exposure to the abdomen and a leaded collar should be used to protect the thyroid from radiation. (The leaded collar should also be used on all women of childbearing age and children.) You don't need to delay dental X-rays if you are trying to become pregnant or are breastfeeding. Talk with your dentist if you have concerns. ■

FINAL IMPRESSIONS

Is the ADA House too big to fail?

The 2011 ADA House of Delegates (HOD) passed a resolution authorizing a comprehensive governance study with funding up to $300,000. The ADA Board of Trustees (BOT) selected Westman and Associates, a firm experienced in the management issues of associations, but I think they face a daunting task.

Like our federal government the ADA has grown, somewhat willy nilly, to encompass 150 committees, councils, (the ever popular) task forces and other entities. Rumor has it that a task force, authorized in 1999 by the HOD to investigate the ADA's place in the space program, is missing somewhere near Cape Canaveral.

The financial health of the association is facing potential implosion; 37 percent of the membership is older than 55. When they reach age 65 their dues are reduced by half if they still work, and to zero if they retire. Overlaying this problem is the poor performance of ADA investments in the last decade and the diminishing market share of membership.

Accordingly, Westman has interviewed 80 ADA leaders and conducted a questionnaire survey of 700 additional leaders to elicit suggestions on how the governance of the ADA could be improved. Although their work is not complete, they have identified some promising suggestions. Among them, reducing the size of the HOD, now at 460-plus members, and the sunset review of some 150 entities.

Westman never asked me, but I have some suggestions.

Instead of reducing the size of the HOD, the governance committee should look at eliminating it! Not only is the size of the HOD unwieldy, it has been hijacked by an ultra conservative block that, like in Congress, takes no prisoners.

Further, in my opinion, the HOD has acted capriciously over the last decade by adding an average of $1 million in spending to the budget every year; a few years ago there was exuberant delight and chortling in the House when they beat back a modest dues raise, resulting in a deficit budget. There are just so many additions to the budget that an organization can absorb without income to support them. It reminds me of Congress voting for guns and butter and cutting taxes.

Of course, I'm kidding on the square; the HOD will never vote itself out of existence. However, I believe a smaller HOD could be more nimble and quick — let alone effective. A sizeable deliberative body is no wiser than a smaller one.

Sunsetting review of the 150 ADA governing units is an idea that has come of age. The governance committee should focus on what's vital to the association's mission; it must be doable and cost effective. We have had too many programs that seem to die with a whimper and little to show for it. Consolidating councils or even eliminating them has to be on the table. An entity for every program or activity can no longer be supported.

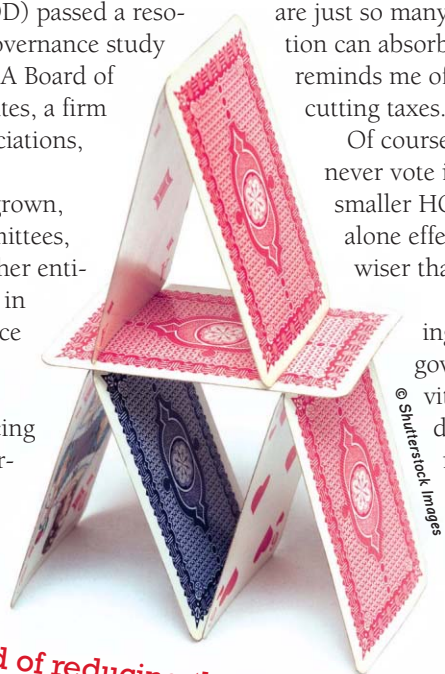

Getting back to Westman's daunting task, in 1992 the HOD authorized the BOT to spend more than $300,000 to study the management of the ADA (see, nothing's new).

Coopers and Lybrand was selected to conduct the study. The BOT in 1994 submitted the report and proposed a package of resolutions to streamline the association based on the firm's recommendations. Not only was the study lambasted, but also every resolution was defeated because someone's ox was being gored. Surprise, surprise: the debate was political. On the final day of the meeting, and only on reconsideration, the House passed one of the resolutions that combined three science-related councils into one.

The delegate chosen for the honor of making the motion for the adjournment of the House admonished the association, saying, "The next time we pay for a governance study we should tell the firm conducting it, 'we don't want any changes.'"

In short, we are not so big that we can't fail. There will be no Washington bailout. ■

Instead of reducing the size of the HOD, the governance committee should look at eliminating it! Not only is the size of the HOD unwieldy, it has been hijacked by an ultra conservative block that, like in Congress, takes no prisoners.
