April 13 Regional Meeting minutes

THE REGIONAL MEETING OF THE CHICAGO DENTAL SOCIETY CONVENEED APRIL 13 AT THE DRURY THEATRE AND CONFERENCE CENTER in Oakbrook Terrace, with CDS President George Zehak presiding.

Dr. Zehak called the meeting to order at 9:10 a.m.
Dr. Zehak encouraged attendees to visit the exhibits during the breaks to see what each had to offer. He expressed appreciation to the exhibitors for their continued support. He announced that representatives from Dent-IL-PAC were available in the lobby area and encouraged everyone to join and get a sticker to affix to their badge.

Dr. Zehak then asked for a show of hands of those who had attended the 2016 CDS Midwinter Meeting, adding that he hoped they would all return for the 2017 Midwinter Meeting.

Inasmuch as the official minutes of the meeting of Sept. 16, 2015, were published in the December 2015 issue of the CDS Review, a motion was entertained to dispense with reading them.

MOVED by Seymour Wachtenheim, seconded by Roger Pardon, and carried to dispense with reading the Sept. 16 minutes at this time.

MOVED by Roger Pardon, seconded by Cheryl Watson-Lowry and carried to accept the minutes of the meeting of Sept. 16.

Inasmuch as the official minutes of the meeting of Oct. 28, 2015, were published in the December 2015 issue of the CDS Review, a motion was entertained to dispense with reading them.

MOVED by Roger Pardon, seconded by Cheryl Watson-Lowry, and carried to dispense with reading the Oct. 28 minutes at this time.

MOVED by Seymour Wachtenheim, seconded by Roger Pardon, and carried to accept the minutes of the meeting of Oct. 28.

There were no reports of the Board, Standing or Special committees.

There was no unfinished or new business to report.

With no further business, Dr. Zehak introduced Jeff Horowitz, DMD, who presented a program entitled ‘I’ve Got TMJ!’ Treating Temporo-Mandibular Disorders as a Part of Comprehensive Care.

The meeting was adjourned at approximately 2:05 p.m. ■

Despite changes, our future holds promise

PREVIOUSLY, I WROTE ABOUT HOW CHANGE CAN SOMETIMES BE FRIGHTENING, BUT THAT IT IS ALWAYS INEVITABLE. As the old saying goes, “the only constant is change.” I want to follow that up by discussing some changes that are occurring, how fast those changes are coming and what they mean to dentistry.

Famous futurist Buckminster Fuller – inventor of the geodesic dome – coined the term, “Knowledge Doubling Curve.” His research revealed that human knowledge doubled every century up to around the year 1900. By the end of World War II, the time frame that human knowledge doubled dropped to every 25 years. Current research shows that overall human knowledge is doubling about every 13 months and clinical knowledge is doubling every 18 months.

Of course, the amount of knowledge does not necessarily correspond to the awareness and application of that knowledge; human nature, programmed in part by biology, plays a factor as well.

We are already seeing the functions of machinery, computers and humans gradually begin to merge, as scientists work to give computers artificial intelligence. In our lifetime, perhaps, we may not be able to tell the difference between some human interactions and computer interactions.

For dentists, the challenge will always be how we use new information and adapt it to previously learned skills and knowledge in order to deliver the best treatment for our patients.

Changes in technology already allow us to serve our patients better. We use the internet for almost everything. Computerization is reducing the number of people needed to purchase items or obtain reservations. It enables us to get better results from examinations and procedures, too.

But computers don't have human sense. They can only do what they are programmed to do. This is why dentistry will continue to shine. Only a dentist and his or her staff can fully interact with the patient to give the best oral care possible and deal with the patient’s concerns related to that care.

cases, the equipment is becoming more affordable.

While it is exciting to see how rapidly things are changing and improving, there are also downsides; technology is not inexpensive and can become obsolete in no time.

The price to join our profession has grown quite high. The costs of dental education continues to escalate at an alarming rate, from the perspective of both the students and the dental schools. Like practitioners, dental schools must also keep up with the changes in technology. But keeping up with technology, complying with new regulations and maintaining infrastructure all contribute to making dental education very expensive.

Many dental students and recent graduates have racked up large amounts of debt that is hard to pay off and limits their ability to open up their own practices. As a profession, we must work to find ways to help our new and future dentists address these issues. The Chicago Dental Society understands these concerns. We are working to address them, because we know that these young professionals are our future.

Fortunately, despite the downsides, dentistry continues to be a desirable and viable profession; amazing, intelligent and skillful people want to be dentists.

How will dental care and dentistry look in the future? I will leave the future to your imagination.

However, I will predict this: dentistry will remain a great profession for a long time, because the individuals that are attracted to dentistry are very intelligent and caring people. They are willing and able to keep up with change in order to give even better treatment to their patients.
Opioids

From doctor shopping to interaction with other medications, what every dental practice needs to know

by Joseph DeRosier

OPIOD ABUSE IS A GROWING PROBLEM IN THE UNITED STATES AND THE ISSUE HAS BEEN GETTING MUCH ATTENTION from media outlets, law enforcement, healthcare professionals and politicians, all the way up to President Barack Obama.

The level of concern appears not to be misplaced, according to the assessment of several experts. The drug abuse, related addiction and even death associated with opioids are real issues that dental professionals need to know, experts point out.

And just because dentists may only occasionally prescribe narcotics to help patients deal with pain and discomfort, and may only do so for a limited time period, dentists need to be mindful of their responsibilities, according to Kevin Van Kanegan, the clinical program director of the College of Dental Medicine – Illinois at Midwestern University in Downers Grove.

“Dentists are definitely part of the picture (of combating opioid abuse),” Dr. Van Kanegan said. “We prescribe a lot.”

“This is not a small problem,” he said of narcotic abuse, pointing out that in 2014, 47,055 deaths were attributed to drug overdoses with 61 percent of those deaths attributed to opiates. “Historically, we (dentists) have been liberal in prescribing narcotics.”

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention 78 people in America die each day from opioid overdose. And thousands more are affected by addictions that make living a normal life, interacting with family and holding a job, an impossibility.
School of Dentistry. "Opioids are not emeritus at the University of Maryland post-operative pain is not a narcotic," said Dr. Spolarich. registered dental hygienist Ann Eshcologist and dentist Harold Crossley and professionals, who focus on the pharmaopioid options for pain control."

For the most part, opiates are not really our drugs of choice for everyday pain control in dentistry because the anti-inflammatories like ibuprofen are better choices."

Dr. Crossley pointed out a study that showed using a combination of acetam-ophen and ibuprofen is very effective.

An analysis published in 2013 in the Journal of the American Dental Association by Paul Moore, chair of dental anesthesiology at the University of Pittsburgh and Elliot Hersh, a professor of pharmacology at the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia, found the acetaminophen/ibuprofen mixture works better than combinations that included opioid drugs for the relief of pain from dental operations.

The study, published in the August 2013 issue of the Journal of the American Dental Association, showed that using a nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drug (NSAIDS), such as ibuprofen along with acetaminophen together suppresses pain better than either one can alone.

Dr. Crossley said that an opioid/acetaminophen combination frequently prescribed is hydrocodone and acetam-ophen, marketed as Vicodin from Abbott Laboratories.

He said only a few years ago Vicodin was the number one prescribed drug in the United States with 132 million prescriptions. That means more than one out of every three people in the nation was getting a prescription for the painkiller.

But in October 2014 the Federal Drug Administration changed the classification of Vicodin to a Schedule II drug, placing more restrictions on dispensing it. For instance, a patient needs a written prescription for the drug instead of having one called into a pharmacy.

Since the change, the number of pre-

Beware of doctor shoppers

DENTISTS NEED TO BE AWARE of people who are looking to score opioid prescriptions to satisfy a habit. Here are some guidelines on how to be proactive and not add to the drug abuse problem.

Never prescribe a drug without seeing the patient in person.

"You should never write a prescription for someone you have not assessed and diagnosed," Dr. Van Kanegan said.

Dentists should also be leery of someone who calls the office saying they are in pain and need a prescription but are from out of town and just passing through and do not have time for proper medical attention, said Dr. Crossley.

The timing of a call might also be a red flag, he said. Someone looking for help on a Friday night or near closing time might mean trouble.

Safety when dealing with a potential drug abuser is key, he said. A dentist should never meet alone with someone seeking a prescription; someone looking for drugs might be desperate.

And if you do decide to consider prescribing an opioid, check the state’s prescription drug monitoring program database to see if the patient is getting drugs from other sources as well.

"If I suspect someone is a doctor shopper, I can go into the database and check it out," he said.

Don’t draw conclusions from someone’s age or social status, Dr. Spolarich points out. Drug abusers do not fit a stereotype.

“We see a lot of women in their 50s who are well-educated, groomed and savvy,” she said. “The danger is when we stereo-typically think of who is a drug shopper.” Drug shoppers do not always look the way you think they should look, she added.

She said one study showed women can get upwards of 20 different prescriptions from various sources.
What to consider when prescribing an opioid

There will be times when giving a patient an opioid is the best option. The following are some tips from the experts aimed at limiting the possibility of drug abuse and misuse of opioids.

GET AN UPDATED MEDICAL HISTORY

“Always, at every visit, not just once a year, or twice a year but every time a patient comes in get a complete list of what kind of medicines that person is taking,” Dr. Spolarich said. “And that also includes herbal and dietary supplements, too, because some of them can also interact with traditional drugs and change their metabolism or cause additive effects so you really need to know what people are using.”

Also, dentists should check to make sure there are no drug compatibility issues.

“In today’s world, dentists really need to have some kind of software program that allows them to check for potential interactions and risks before they write the prescription,” she said.

A positive relationship with pharmacists is invaluable, she said.

“I think that dentists have to recognize that pharmacists are our friends and can partner with us to manage patients.”

Since pain associated with dental procedures is usually short lived, Dr. Crossley suggests dentists only prescribe medication for a day or two and that patients “don’t really need refills.”

ADVISE PATIENTS HOW TO DISPOSE OF LEFTOVER PRESCRIPTIONS SAFELY

He said it is also important to give patients information about what to do with leftover medicine so that it does not sit around the house and become a target of people looking for opioids.

Nearby drug-take-back locations can be found on the federal government’s Drug Enforcement Administration website http://1.usa.gov/1MTc81D, he said.

Dr. Spolarich said access to leftover medications is a dangerous situation.

“Accidental overdose is a huge problem,” she said. “We find that patients don’t know what to do with their leftover opiates, they hold on to them for a long time and then, of course, it becomes a window of opportunity for kids or anybody else in the house to get their hands on them.”

And even if a prescription is for a small amount, the danger still exists, Dr. Van Kanegan said. “We may have only prescribed 12 doses, but they may have 80 (back at home) form other sources,” he said.

scriptions for Vicodin has dropped to about 119 million a year, Dr. Crossley said.

Another issue to consider, according to Dr. Spolarich, is what other medications the patient is using.

It is not uncommon for a patient already to be taking an opiate for medical reasons.

“I work with geriatrics and special care (individuals), so I am going to have patients who are living with chronic cancer pain, chronic bone pain and other chronic pain syndromes where they are going to be on opiates long term,” Dr. Spolarich said.

“Now dentists are faced with the decision, are we going to add something else to the mix and then somebody really gets into trouble?” she said. “It isn’t just what we are dispensing to our patients, but it’s what else are they already taking that could add to the risk if we add one more drug to the mix.”

Dealing with older patients also presents special problems, she explained, because of the number of medications they may be using.

For instance, Dr. Spolarich said some older adults take anti-anxiety medications for reasons other than anxiety, such as helping to combat insomnia.

“I don’t think dentists know that you are not supposed to give opiates at the same time that an older adult is on a benzodiazepine (such as tranquilizers like Valium or Xanax), anti-anxiety medications, because of the additive risks for older people – risks for falling, cognition changes. I think nobody really talks about this in dentistry. It’s just more commonplace in medicine than in dentistry,” she said.

“There are many, many drugs that interact with opiates where you have additive effects,” she explained. “You have people who are taking things like anti-anxiety medications and then we’re going to add an opiate for pain control and maybe that person is drinking alcohol, and before we know it, that person has a lot of problems with reaction time, judgment and being able to stay awake because these things have sedative effects.”
That added risk might be deadly. She said the more drugs in a person’s system that have depressant effects, the greater the risk that it can depress someone’s brain stem and can shut off their drive for breathing. But there are still reasons a dentist might consider prescribing an opioid.

For instance, some patients have gastric issues that preclude them from taking NSAIDs, Dr. Crossley said. Dr. Spolarich said she agrees with Dr. Crossley. “There is also a tendency to be afraid to write (prescriptions) for some of these drugs,” she said, which leaves some people “under managed” for their pain and “that’s not good either.”

“You shouldn’t be afraid to use these drugs, but be mindful of drug selection, compatibility and what other kinds of things are going on with the patient. It’s best to do short-time use only for most of the kind of pain that patients experience with dentistry,” she said.

Always get a complete list of the medicines your patient is taking, including herbal and dietary supplements, too, because some of them can also interact with traditional drugs and change their metabolism or cause additive effects.

Dr. Van Kanegan said the best way for dentists to fight the opioid abuse problem is to eliminate the source of pain in the first place. Stressing preventative dental care is one way for dentists to help patients avoid gum disease and tooth decay that lead to the need for painkillers.

And if there is a dental problem, he said, acting expeditiously could limit the need to use opiates. “The more promptly we can get someone in to take care of the problem that is causing the pain, the less likely it is that we will have a need for analgesics,” he said.

As Dr. Spolarich put it, “This is everybody’s problem, but we can be much more proactive in dentistry to help find good solutions for better, safer use of opioids; I think we really play a critical role in that.”

No one wants ‘Dr. J-Dubs’ to examine them

SEATED IN A CROWDED THEATER BEFORE A SUN- DAY MATINEE, I LOOKED AROUND AND ESTIMATED THAT ONE IN THREE PEOPLE WAS KILLING TIME with her nose buried in her phone. I, too, scrolled through Facebook until the lights dimmed, and made a few mental notes before I silenced my phone:

1) There are certain friends with whom I should not discuss politics.

2) Sunday afternoon television preferences should best be described as “Guilty Pleasures.”

3) Childhood photos are stored in attics and basements for a good reason.

So imagine what hiring managers are thinking when they troll online. A 2015 survey of 400 human resources professionals found that nearly two-thirds of organizations hired employees through social media in the previous year. They turned primarily to LinkedIn (57 percent of respondents) and professional associations’ networking sites (30 percent), but a not-insignificant 19 percent had sourced new employees through Facebook, too.

Dentists in the job market should review their social media activity to strengthen their professional image and capture favorable attention from potential employers. Consider that 72 percent of HR professionals in health care specifically said when surveyed that it was very important or somewhat important for job seekers to have a social media presence.

These 400 survey respondents were members of the Society for Human Resource Management, the world’s largest such organization. Members top 275,000 in 160 countries, with 575 chapters in the United States.

LinkedIn and professional associations’ sites topped survey respondents’ list of important places to have a social media presence, with greater than 80 percent of survey respondents favoring them; Pinterest, YouTube and Instagram each received less than 10 percent of respondents’ support.

Whether you’re a job seeker or a potential employer trolling social media for new hires, consider how to spot a true professional in a crowd.

• The page is current. Make frequent updates to ensure information as presented is complete and accurate, including employment, education and skills.

• The content is professional in its style. It’s hard in 2016 to stay out of the political debate, but avoid posts that could be considered divisive or offensive to potential colleagues and patients.

• The person is professional in style. This includes the name and photos. Use your real name (this means Jane Williams rather than J-Dubs; No one wants to be examined by Dr. J-Dubs), and a professional-quality headshot as your profile. Save the image from the Wrigley Field bleachers for another use.

• The page is in good company. Link to pages and sites managed by the professional organizations you belong to, the charitable projects you participate in, the schools you attended and the dental practices where you’ve worked. These hint to potential employers what your resume looks like and build your credibility.

From the human resources survey, 47 percent of respondents recommended joining social media groups that are relevant to your career. You can find the Chicago Dental Society on Facebook and LinkedIn, but also Twitter and YouTube. The CDS Foundation, Illinois State Dental Society and American Dental Association are similarly engaged in social media.

Remember that social media was made to be fun, so don’t consider this as homework. Limiting yourself to one or two sites that you actively monitor will make it easier to keep them current, and it will enable you to build a community of “friends” who respect you, your profession and your job search.

Be prepared for medical emergencies

No dentist ever thinks it will ever happen to him or her: A MEDICAL EMERGENCY IN THE OFFICE. Every year, thousands of medical emergencies take place in dental offices, ranging from simple syncope to fatal cardiac arrests to sedation deaths. Are you prepared?

Illinois, along with many states, has enacted laws that require the dental professional to be prepared for such emergencies by mandating BLS (Basic Life Support) certification and by requiring every office to have a written medical emergency plan. Moreover, those who provide sedation (beyond nitrous oxide) are required by the Illinois Dental Practice Act to have additional sedation training and emergency drugs and equipment on site, such as a sphygmomanometer (blood pressure), stethoscope, oxygen delivery system with full face masks and a defibrillator, just to name a few.

The dental office medical emergency plan must not only be in writing, but also should be practiced by the dentist and the staff. The plan need not be complicated.

For instance, to avoid a chaotic scene, if a patient begins to experience respiratory distress, each dental team member should be assigned a specific duty. One member should stay with the patient and assist the dentist who initiates the emergency response. Another member gets the emergency equipment and supplies. A third member calls 911, if necessary, to describe the emergency to the dispatcher. And a fourth team member directs the paramedics to the operatory.

For dentists who do not perform sedation (the vast majority), they are not required to perform extraordinary resuscitative efforts such as starting IVs or performing intubation. However, as health care providers, dentists should be familiar with the typical medical emergencies that arise in order to respond properly. For instance, syncope is the most common medical emergency encountered by a dentist. As a result, the dentist should be prepared to place the patient in a supine position with feet elevated slightly and assess the patient’s breathing and heartbeat.

A great resource for learning more about managing emergencies is the supplement to JADA published in the May 2010 issue. Prepare yourself and your staff for medical emergencies. It is not only mandated by law, but more importantly, it can also save lives.

How would you like to give back?

1. Make a donation to the CDS Foundation.
   This simple act is so important to the success of the CDS Foundation and the causes we support. Your donated dollars are used to fund the CDS Foundation Clinic in Wheaton, where treatment is provided to those most in need. The CDS Foundation also supports clinics and agencies that provide dental care throughout the CDS service area.

   I am happy to announce that we have made it more convenient for you to make a contribution to the CDS Foundation when you pay your ADA/ISDS/CDS dues this year. Take time to check one more box and make a difference in the lives of many.

2. Come to a CDS Foundation friend-raiser or fundraiser.
   We hold several events throughout the year that raise money to further our mission. Over the past year, we have held a wine-tasting fundraiser, a Blackhawks game friend-raiser and a Wall of Wine fundraiser at the Midwinter Meeting. The CDS Foundation Clinic hosted a Give Kids a Smile Day event in February, where we treated patients and raised awareness for the great need for oral health care in the clinic area.

   We will hold a Sunday matinee friend-raiser July 17 at Wrigley Field when the Chicago Cubs play the Texas Rangers. Tickets are available at www.cds.org. Find more information in this issue of the CDS Review and at www.cdsfound.org.

3. Donate your time and expertise at the CDS Foundation Clinic.
   Our clinic is a state-of-the-art facility that makes it easy for you to give back to the community. We offer you the flexibility... to schedule when you want to volunteer, as well as what types of treatment you would like to provide. Please contact Geralyn Pelka at 630.260.8530 to schedule time to volunteer or take a tour of our clinic.

We recently began accepting patients under 18 years old at the clinic. There is great need for volunteers who are comfortable seeing these patients.

You can also make volunteering fun by bringing a colleague with you, so that you can both enjoy the satisfaction that comes from helping others.

I thank all those who have already made the commitment to volunteer at the CDS Foundation Clinic. I appreciate your efforts.

4. Volunteer for a CDS Foundation Committee. There are many opportunities to volunteer with the CDS Foundation outside of the clinic. We have several committees that are in need of dedicated volunteers, including Major Gifts, Communications, Special Events and Grants. Most of these committees meet by conference call or teleconference several times a year, so the time commitment is less onerous.

5. Participate on the CDS Foundation Board of Trustees. The CDS Foundation Board of Trustees is made up of hard-working, thoughtful and energetic individuals who want to make better oral health care in the Chicago area a reality. The Board meets four times a year at the CDS office in downtown Chicago. Membership on the Board is not limited to dentists; we are always looking for other service-oriented people from the community who want to make a difference. Executive Director Greg Johnson said there was “more” to the office closings than tied-up insurance or Medicaid payments.

Counter to the Auburn Dental Care claim, the state has not shut down, though it’s been without a budget since July 2015. Historically low Medicaid payments have continued, by court order, along with a handful of other budget categories, though payments are running roughly two weeks later than usual.

The waters have been choppier for dentists whose patients are state employees. When the state stopped payments to Delta Dental of Illinois in September for administering its PPO and Premier plans for state employees, reimbursements to in-network dentists dried up, affecting some 700 dentists statewide, according to Mr. Johnson.

How is the Illinois budget impasse affecting dentists?

by Stephanie Sisk

WORD THAT TWO CHAMPAIGN-AREA DENTAL PRACTICES CLOSED IN MARCH AND APRIL BECAUSE OF THE ILLINOIS GOVERNMENT BUDGET IMPASSE set off a flurry of questions and speculation about how dentists have fared during the budget standoff.

To be sure, some practices felt squeezed after state payments locked up in September, but a deal struck in March to jumpstart insurance disbursements has eased dentists’ balance sheets. In March, various media outlets reported the closing of Auburn Dental Care and its sister practice in nearby Champaign, which fingered the “lack of reimbursement” amid the “government shutdown” in Springfield in a letter posted on its door. An employee answering the phone at the Champaign office, which was to close April 14, said no one could comment on the closure, though Illinois State Dental Society
Because Delta Dental’s network of dentists is offered to all employee insurance plans, including state employees, in-network dentists had few options. Out-of-network dentists, Mr. Johnson said, started asking patients to pay up front. Further, self-paying state employee patients weren’t being reimbursed by the state either, creating a perfect storm that led dentists to worry their state employee patients might put off or decline treatment for financial reasons. The tab? Outstanding reimbursements owed to dentists and patients in Illinois since September total $125 million, Mr. Johnson said.

The effects were most keenly felt—and the financial blow greater—for small community dental practices in cities downstate, university towns and towns with prisons or other large operations with high concentrations of state employees, Mr. Johnson said. Chicago’s more diverse economy and broader patient base lessened the burden of insurance nonpayment, but some practices felt the pinch nonetheless.

Oak Park dentist Richard Perry said he has received most, but not all, reimbursements for his patients on Medicaid, which has 12 dental administrators around the state, covering different categories of patients and operating with different “delivery” models. After a 46-year career, Dr. Perry said he is winding down his practice. But as a member of the CDS Government Affairs and Access Advocacy Committee and a board member at Delta Dental of Illinois, he “got calls from a lot of dentists” as repercussions of the state budget impasse grew. “People were upset,” he said.

Starting in January, legislators, state officials and ISDS representatives began meeting with Delta Dental officials to explore options. It became clear, Mr. Johnson said, “that somebody had to do something” to get insurance reimbursements flowing again.

Ann Marie Walker, corporate communications manager at Delta Dental of Illinois, said the insurer was “empathetic” to dentists’ plight and worked out a plan with a third-party financial institution, Health Care Finance Ltd., to buy the outstanding reimbursement debt owed by the state and offer partial payments to dentists to help them catch up.

The program was announced March 15, allowing dentists to sign up with Health Care Finance to receive 90 percent of owed reimbursement. The remainder will be paid when the state adopts a budget, minus 1 percent interest after 90 days for the duration of the budget stalemate. The state will owe Health Care Finance interest for covering the payments.

Ms. Walker said Delta Dental will work with dentists interested in signing up with Health Care Finance, which is taking calls at 855.272.4324. She said it’s too soon to know how many dentists have signed up so far. Mr. Johnson said that each dental practice should consider it a “business decision” whether to accept Health Care Finance’s terms or secure a loan with a local bank to shore up cash flow issues.

Patchwork solutions to reimbursement may become the “new normal” in Illinois since the budget standoff doesn’t look to end anytime soon and a new fiscal year looms.

But instead, he stayed in Chicago and completed training in pediatric dentistry and went to work for the UIC dental school’s department of orthodontics, a position that lasted for almost 20 years. He then moved to Rush University Medical School, but also has a private practice in Naperville.

“Most of my work is clinical,” Dr. Figueroa explained, “with a small component of teaching.” As part of that experience he helped organize several groups of surgeons to go back to Guatemala to do cleft lip improvement surgeries. And through that work he partnered with John Polley, a surgeon who recently moved from Rush to Michigan, and helped discover a technique used in treating craniofacial deformities.

“My intention was to complete my training and go back to Guatemala,” Dr. Figueroa said.

Alvaro Figueroa has a mission

by Joseph DeRosier

ALVARO FIGUEROA IS PASSIONATE ABOUT HIS PROFESSION of dentistry and bringing its benefits to others. And that passion can be seen in his efforts to help fellow health care professionals give quality dental care to underserved children of the world, especially those dealing with difficult dental issues such as cleft lip, palate and other craniofacial problems.

After attending dental school in Guatemala, Dr. Figueroa came to the United States in 1976 for a fellowship in craniofacial development at the National Institute of Dental and Craniofacial Research at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, MD.

“The NIH has always been in the forefront of research on craniofacial biology,” Dr. Figueroa said. “My intention was to do something clinical and not just deal with research.”

His work during the fellowship spurred his desire to help others. “It became evident to me that becoming an orthodontist would be a crucial move for me to help children born with craniofacial issues,” he said.

He then earned his Orthodontics Specialty Certificate at the University of Rochester School of Medicine and Dentistry, Eastman Institute for Oral Health. In 1980, he relocated to Chicago and received a Pediatric Dentistry Specialty Certificate at the University of Illinois at Chicago College of Dentistry. He also earned a Masters of Science degree in Oral Health and completed a fellowship at the Center for Craniofacial Anomalies at UIC.

“My intention was to complete my training and go back to Guatemala,” Dr. Figueroa said.

But instead, he stayed in Chicago and completed training in pediatric dentistry and went to work for the UIC dental school’s department of orthodontics, a position that lasted for almost 20 years. He then moved to Rush University Medical School, but also has a private practice in Naperville.

“Most of my work is clinical,” Dr. Figueroa explained, “with a small component of teaching.” As part of that experience he helped organize several groups of surgeons to go back to Guatemala to do cleft lip improvement surgeries. And through that work he partnered with John Polley, a surgeon who recently moved from Rush to Michigan, and helped discover a technique used in treating craniofacial deformities.

“We developed a special system moving bones in the face and jaw that is...
That way there is no interruption of care, he explained. Children do not need to wait for outside doctors to do the work. “It becomes sustainable and self-sufficient,” he said of the cleft operations.

He said after they train local doctors the care can become very sophisticated in even remote villages, some offering better care than what can be seen here in the United States.

Dr. Figueroa said he likes to take at least one mission trip a year. His most recent Smile Train trip was to Saint Cristobal, in the Mexican state of Chiapas in February of 2014.

His son, Aaron, who is also a dentist and is pursuing specialized training in oral and maxillofacial surgery at the University of Iowa, accompanied him on the trip.

His other son, Alex, is also an orthodontist in Naperville, and is active in the West Suburban Branch of the Chicago Dental Society.

“We went to a remote area where hospital surgeons operated on 40 to 50 patients,” he said. His group included three surgeons, and two residents who were learning the procedure.

“I find it very rewarding not to just go and do stuff and leave, but to go and leave knowing someone is there who is going to help their own people,” he said.

MAY/JUNE 2016 | cds review | 47
I was irked recently when I read a letter to the American Broadcasting Company decrying the “denigration” of hygienists on the TV show The Bachelor. The letter was from the American Dental Hygienists Association.

What miffed me was a restatement of the ADHA’s vision, “to integrate dental hygienists into the health care delivery system as essential primary care providers to expand access. . .”

I think that statement is hypocritical on two levels. First, you can’t anoint yourselves as primary caregivers. Second, when the opportunity to increase access to care presents itself, one can’t oppose it to protect one’s own turf.

Every 10 years, the Illinois Dental Practice Act is subject to sunset review by the Illinois General Assembly. The importance of the Dental Practice Act cannot be overestimated; it protects the public’s oral health treatment by ensuring that only a dentist heads the dental team.

In the spring of 2015, prior to the sunset date of the current Dental Practice Act, representatives from the Illinois State Dental Society (ISDS) met in Springfield with representatives from The Pew Charitable Trusts, the Illinois Public Health Association (IPHA) and the Illinois Dental Hygienists Association (IDHA) to make changes to the act – ostensibly to benefit the public.

ISDS supported changes that would increase access to care for the needy and underserved. Not unexpectedly, IDHA pushed for independent hygienist practice. Negotiations, sometimes testy, were protracted. The four organizations eventually agreed to a change that would allow suitably trained hygienists to provide customary hygiene services in public health settings with the indirect supervision of a dentist (This is a five-year pilot program, subject to sunset review.)

But when ISDS, IPHA and Pew agreed to add a provision in the act to allow suitably trained dental assistants to perform supragingival scaling (mostly plaque removal for fluoride application) on children under 12 years old while under the direct supervision of a dentist, IDHA representatives exploded and attempted to amend the proposed act to cripple the dental assistant expanded duties provision. Wrapping themselves in a phony cloak of “public safety,” IDHA enlisted help from its hired ally the Illinois Federation of Teachers and long-time advocate State Sen. Donnie Trotter (D-17th District).

ISDS, Dent-IL-PAC and the Chicago Dental Society (CDS) have no need for hired guns. They swung into action, sending legislative action alerts to members, especially those involved in legislative action. The alerts listed names of the House and Senate members on the licensing committees of the General Assembly to be contacted.

When the smoke cleared, the revised practice act without the IDHA’s amendments was passed by the Illinois House of Representatives by a vote of 105 to 4; the Senate followed suit by passing the measure 44 to 4.

This was an exquisite outcome on several levels. ISDS had a defined goal that directly benefits those in need. To achieve that goal, they won support from Pew and IPHA, organizations that have at times been adversaries of organized dentistry.

And ISDS addressed the issue in a professional and ethical manner, demonstrating sophisticated political know-how.

Statewide, only 37 percent of ISDS members belong to Dent-IL-PAC. Regrettably, only 25 percent of CDS members belong.

It doesn’t cost a fortune to support the PAC. An entry-level membership is $150. Without a strong professional association and an equally strong PAC, our profession would be a very different one today. We all pay insurance premiums to protect ourselves; consider Dent-IL-PAC as another phrase for insurance.

For a more detailed explanation of the expanded duties given to hygienists and dental assistants, I recommend you read ISDS President Bradley Barnes’ commentary in the January/February issue of Illinois Dental News.
SMART FOR YOUR PRACTICE.
AND FOR YOUR PATIENTS.

At Delta Dental of Illinois, we encourage our members to visit the dentist regularly. That equals more than 2 million potential patients seeking the services of a Delta Dental network dentist. And with our accurate claims processing, convenient technology support and unrivaled service, we help give you more time to do what you do best - care for your patients.

There are many reasons why nearly 80 percent of practicing dentists participate in Delta Dental's networks nationally. Visit SmartForYourPractice.com to learn more about joining the Delta Dental PPO™ network today.
